"Shampoo the hair in a good egg shampoo. Then rinse it a thousand times"—to quote a London hair dresser.

"Where hair is extremely dry it should be brushed often with commeal. If the hair has no oil in it there is nothing so foolish as to wash it, for there is little to be washed out except the dust. And this can be taken out with the dry meal. I have often tried this very successfully upon dry hair. It seems to restore the natural oil and to make the hair lighter in color.

"Hair that is oily and heavy and apparently very much clogged as to the scalp and the roots with oil should be washed with good pure soap. No fancy shampoo is necessary. The soap must never be rubbed on the hair, for if rubbed on it is impossible to get it off the hair strands, but it should be made into a thick lather and rubbed in. Soap jelly, home made, is best of all.

The Secret of Washing.

The Secret of Washing.

"The secret of washing dark oily hair lies in the rinsing. This should be done with very hot water. A great many Glossy waving hair should be the lot of every woman, but how is it to be made glossy and waving? To this it may be replied that all hair is different and that each variety of hair requires its own treatment. The treatment which benefits one kind of hair will spoil another.

Hair that is dry is almost always filled with dandruff. This lies next to the scalp and is unpleasant to see. It does not really injure the scalp. But it sifts down and is not nice or well groomed. Yet how can it be helped, where the hair is benefited greatly. What is more its color is improved and, often, the very tone of the hair is made better, so that it has more life and springiness.

"Shampoo the hair in a good egg shampoo. Then rinse it a thousand times," to genter a Leadon het down and the result is a headache. Let the head cool in the natural way while the hair is drying. It will be of a good temperature by the time one is ready to go out.

"Few people realize how dirty the hair gets. Often that which seems to be dark hair would be much lighter if it the tone of one's hair, if one may so call the process.

Care of the Scalp.

Care of the Scalp.

"The scalp is a very tender piece of skin. It, is full of pores and air holes, full of fittle breathing places, and full of small spaces through which the hair springs. These cells are very tender, and the little roots of hair, sending up beyond repair is a very few minutes'

"Part off the hair again and go over the next parting in the same manner. Do not use more than a suspicion of oil, not enough to drip from the finger tips, and do not, on any account, get a particle upon the hair. This is the best known treatment for the scalp.

For Dry Hair.

"Dry hair will never shine, but after the scalp is treated it will begin to be oily and it will gradually take on a little gloss. Repeat and it will be pos-

"Women whose hair is growing gray brush the hair, not the scalp. The obaround the matter by having the hair ject is to free the hair of dust and to dyed. This will restore its color. Now dyed. This will restore its color. Now comes the treatment of the scalp to keep it from coming in gray again, for the hair must be persuaded to come in dark, or in its natural color once more. "The treatment is almost identical with the treatment for dry hair. It is dry hair which grows gray first, and to keep it from getting gray the oil treatment is recommended.

"Where the hair is thin and getting gray, and where the temples begin to be bald the roots of the hair should be wetwith a hair tonic made by dropping a little quinine in water. The druggist will tell how much to use. Quinine variles so that it is not safe to prescribe for general use.

Treatment of Gray Hair.

"Women whose hair is gray should not shampoo the hair too often. Nothing makes the hair as gray as washing out the natural oils. The hair must be allowed to accumulate oil and it must not be allowed to get soggy. It can be washed, say, once in a month or six weeks, which is quite enough.

SILK GOWNS

Are Rapidly Superseding Tailor Frocks for Semi-Dress Occasions.

A tailor-made costume is shortly to be relegated to the most informal usage, and for luncheons or eard parties a gown of cloth or silk is now alone smart, unless the coat and skirt cos-tume be made in the most elaborate wfy. Over the reception dress is worn a wrap of cloth, fur, or heavy silk.

of cloth, fur, or heavy silk.

When refurnishing and adding to the wardrobe at this time of the year attention is, of course, given to what must be provided for the spring, so that if the once smart street suit has lost its first freshness, it is, perhaps, better to procure an attractive dress of some kind which without a wrap can be worn well into the spring.

first freshness, it is, perhaps, better to procure an attractive dress of some kind which without a wrap can be worn well into the soring.

Veiling gowns are decidedly fashionable at this moment, and extremely attractive as well as most inexpensive are the embroidered voile dresses which are now to be had. Canvas in all shades is another material which may be styled among the "new" spring fabrics in so far that it is te have a new lease of life this year. Then, there are numberless silks, both plain and figured, all of which are effective to a degree, Foulard, which last year had rather a rest, has returned with redoubled popularity in the new extra width. While the embroidered pongees are very handsome, this material, save in the heaviest and most expensive qualities, is kept more for the purposes of simple shirt waist dresses, although some fascinatingly pretty models are seen in the colored varieties of pongee.

While all modistes are apt to state quite decidedly that certain styles—as the large puff sleeves or wide boned girdle—are fashionable and must be followed with every gown, still the clever woman will realize when various fads are not becoming, and she will modify such ideas astonishingly, and in many cases depart from them altogether. There are any number of exceptionally pretty waists made with the one-inch beit, although certainly the majority have the wide girdle. Then again with the sleeve—large puffs at the shoulders are fashionable, but the puff may be of chiffion or soft silk, so that while having all the style necessary the lines of the gown may still be kept graceful and becoming. Full skirts also are seen on the smartest of French models, and fortunate indeed is she who can wear to advantage the skirts that are now sold as being made after the only correct styles. It is not everyone, however, that can do this, and it is far better to have the plaits or tucks stitched to the knees if necessary than that one be made to bear close resemblance to a barrel.

The Directoire fashions still prevai barrel.

The Directoire fashions still prevail to a great extent, particularly in slik gowns. The long point in the center of the waist has grown some two or three inches lower, the sleeves are larger and the skirt a trifle fuller about the hips than when the styles of this period were first imitated in this present century, but in the main there is not a very marked difference from this style of costume as worn last year.

Auburn Hair and Intellect.

"Did you ever notice," asked an observant woman, "how many intellectual people have auburn hair? At the theapeople have auburn hair? At the theater the other night I don't remember noticing a single reddish head of hair among the hundreds of uncovered heads spread out before me. They were the well-coiffed heads of the average nice woman. The next night I attended a meeting of a very learned society, at which there were perhaps two or three hundred of the brainiest thinkers and educators around town. And without turning my eyes I picked out at least a dozen auburn-haired women in the few seats in front of me. Now, that was more than a coincidence. It argues something for the possessor of auburn hair, I should think."
